MISCELLANEOUS READING.

A NORMAN LADY. At Cherbourg the great attraction of the ball was the attire of a rich farmer's wife, of Candebee, who appeared in full national dress, nor seemed to think berself either ridi-SWAN & CO'S Lotteries are legal, and au-thorized by the State of Georgia! The culous or singular, amid the numerous sprigs

Seed; Cayenne Pepper, Salad Oil; English Musmore liberal than any other Lottery in the rose color, very short, scarcely reaching to the ankles for the better exhibition of the silk stockings with gold clocks, and the velvet Lotteries for November, 1858, at Augusta, Ga, nether extremities were encased. A kerchief en pointe of the richest point lace was folded to plaits almost to the waist behind, and crossed over the bosom in front, softening, with coquetish fore-thought, the effect of the black velvet bodice, laced and embroidered with gold, and buttoned with a eplendid diamond at the top. Round her neck hung rows upon rows of Venetian gold chain, measuring several yards in length and deemed of considerable value, to which was 800 suspended a diamond cross of immense value, 700 consisting of four diamonds only, but of such 600 remarkable size and intense lustre, that it 500 was declared in the ball-room, that they might stand competition with those worn by the Empress herself upon the same occasion. The head-dress was the characteristic high cap of Normandy, composed of the most admirable point d' Alencon, falling into long baubas over the shoulder, and raised on each side of the face, throwing a soltened shadow over the cheeks. A single lilac ribbon was placed around the crown, attached by a loose bow at the side, but the knot was fixed by a 100,000 diamond star, whose brilliancy attracted the gaze of all the curious critics from Paris, and caused many envious eyes to turn towards it from our fair bonnes, who while affecting A Circular showing the plan of the Lotteries lisping admiration, were yet somewhat discomfitted at beholding diamonds of first water, and lace of the first quality, employed in the adornment of a peasant's cap! The farmer's wife was followed to the door do do 10 halt do 40 00 of the prefecture by many of the beaux esprits and journalists at Paris, who were anxious to get a longer peep at this starry apparition from the past history of the country; for the costume of the people of Normandy is said to date from the Crusaders. What was their astonishment on beholding the lady with the air and majesty of a chole laine of olden time, mount her horse, which stood ready saddled and caparisoned at the door, and ride fearlessly out into the night, alone and unattended, without a dread of thought of harm, perhaps to follow some parrow defile, perhaps to traverse some deep and dangerous stream, before she reached her home at dawn.

The astonishment of the fine gentlemen from Paris at this absence of all feminine, "nerve-" and affectation was loudly expressed and their admiration likewise; but we did not bear of a single instance wherein the aforesaid astonishment and admiration gave rise to the smallest expression of any desire to accompany the fair object of so much interest. In a country where no gas exists, and where pavement is no where laid down, it was scarcely likely, that our exquisites would risk their dainty persons in any demonstrations of oldwhile the fair Norman we beart whole and sound, in spite of the attacks made upon it by the fine gentlemen from Paris, during the ball, the fine gentlemen from Paris retired to rest with their bones unbroken, and their skins whole, and everybody was content. - London Court Journal.
